Well-inform ed sources said the attack at the surrounded sirfield began at 1:00 a.m. yesterday when the North Vietnamese, supported by mortar and rocket fire, and using tanks, penetrated the airfield's perimeter. The field's eastern positions, the sources said, were lost first in reportedly heavy fighting.

Organized resistance ended at 3:00 a.m., the sources said, after North Vietnamese tanks had crossed the strileld. The sources said a wounded Lactian radio operator called for U.S. air strikes against the sirfield garrison's head marters and ammunition depot.

More than 1,000 Laotian soldiers had been regrouped at the airfield, whose American code name is "Lime Lime." The number of survivors was unknown. [UPI quoted the top Lactian commander as saying "approxi-mately one-third" of the sirfield's defenders were unaccounted for after the battle.]

Era of Action

The move presages a new era of federal action against a problem that occurs in various degrees with many of the nation's 3,000 electric plants and many other industrial facilities. It is a problem that will become more widespread in the years alread.

The nation's need for electric of the generating process. Almost half the water used in the United States is for industrial ecoling, a government engineer said this week, and, by the year 2000, the need will equal two-thirds of the nation's natural daily water runoff of 1,200 billion gallons.

The atomic power plants that are superseding oil-fueled ones require even more cooling water than their Greater Conflict

"This conflict between electric power and the environment," the President's science advisor, Dr. Lee A. DuBridge, said recently, "is not apt to diminish but in fact is be-coming increasingly acute."

Power plants are generally situated near waterways so as to have a big supply of cooling water. The Chicago Trial

Justice or an Indictment Of the Judicial System?

By Anthony Lukas

CHICAGO, (NYT).—"It ain't whether you win or lose: It's how you play the game, shouted Abbie Hoffman as the courtroom doors slammed behind him for the last time Fri-

They were fitting words with which to end the four-and-ahalf-month-long Chicago conspiracy trial. For, as Abbie and four other defendants were convicted of crossing state lines with intent to incite a riot, interest began to shift from who won and who lost to how the game was played.

In months to come, as lawyers and appeals court judges comb through the transcript, this question will be asked over and over: 'Did the rules of the American judicial game produce anything faintly approaching justice in this extraordinary

The government'e answer is clear. Thomas A. Foran, the U.S. attorney who prosecuted the case, told a news conference hours after the jury reached its decision: "The verdict proved the jury system works-the very system the defendants were trying so hard to tear down."

True, the jury seems to have shown more critical judgment than expected. It rejected entirely the government's charge that the seven defendants conspired to bring about a rlot during the 1968 Democratic Convention. It completely acquitted the two defendants-John Froines and Lee Weineragainst whom the government presented the last evidence. Finally, it convicted the five most implicated defendants on relatively specific charges. To some, this may have the appearance of justice.

But how were these fine judicial lines drawn? Several jurors interviewed this week by Chicago newsmen said they had reached their verdict through 'a compromise." Eight jurors wanted to acquit everybody of everything. So, as the jury's their fourth day, the jurors (who had been sequestered in a downtown hotel for more than four months) began talking of a compromise which would get them home to their families. Thus, the verdict which "proved the jury system works."

Political Struggle

To some, this may look less like justice than a political com-promise in the great American tradition. If so, it is curiously appropriate: a political end to a political trial. For what went on here for four and a half months was less a trial than a political struggle between defendants committed to "a second American revolution" and a government determined to

Many lawyers insist that was the problem from the start. As they see it, a courtroom is not the place to wage political warfarc. This essential fault may have been compounded by the participants' behavior—whether Judge Julius J. Hoffman's progovernment bias or the defendants' disruptive tactics — but once the government determined to prosecute the leaders of the 1968 demonstrations, and once the defendants decided to meet the challenge head-on, a political battle was joined that simply could not work under the traditional rules of the American judicial game.

The Errors

Thus, many lawyers who have followed the case believe it is riddled with errors which could give the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals grounds to reverse the verdict. Among these, they

• The law itself, which many lawyers regard as unconstitutional. The "anti-riot" provisions of the 1968 civil rights act make it a crime to cross state lines with intent to incite a riot. Critics of the law contend that It is excessively vague and that, by focusing on the defendants' "state of mind," it violates constitutional guarantees of free speech and dissent.

• The nature of the jury. Judge Hoffman rushed through jury selection in half a day, refusing to question the potential jurors on most of the points the defense wanted explored. The most serious omission may have been his failure to question them about previous exposure through press and tele-

Dr. Albert Szent-Gyorgyi.

The Dinosaur Disappeared And Mankind May, Too

By Robert Reinhold

WOODS HOLE, Mass., (NYT). -Any race that does not says Dr. Albert Szent-Gyorgyi, a biologist. "The dinosaurs disappeared, and man may have to disappear too."

This is the way the human predicament is seen by the aging but still vigorous Nobel laureate, liberal and humani-tarian, who despairs of mankind's adapting to its new condition in time to survive many more decades

At 78, Dr. Szent-Gyorgyi watches in quiet desperation and disgust, believing America's "death-oriented" society and the "terrible strain of idiots who govern the world" are moving inexorably and insanely toward ultimate calamity and the destruction of all he cherisheschildren, the ocean, wildlife,

Standing on the porch of his rambling seaside house on Cape Cod, he thrust his hands deep into his pockets and gazed through sad gray eyes as a lone seagull swooped down over the bayberry bushes and skimmed the choppy waters.

Another Age

His mind wandered back to the day in 1937 in Stockholm when he was awarded a Nobel prize for the discovery of Vitamin C. "I was celebrated there as a great hero of man-kind," he said. "That was a life-oriented society."

"Man is a very strange animal," he mused, running his hand over his tanned face and silver-white hair." In much of the world half the children go to bed hungry and we spend a trillion on rubbish-steel, iron, tanks. We are all criminals. There is an old Hungarian poem: If you are among brigands and you are silent, you are a brigand yourself."

All of these ideas and more are included in a book Dr. Szent-Gyorgyi has just completed, "The Crazy Ape," to be published by Philosophical Library, Inc. of New York.

"It is a revolutionary book," he said, "because it's only 40 pages-it can be read in two hours. The trouble with books is that they cannot be read. Who the hell has time to read 300 pages? There is nothing you cannot say in two hours if it is essential" It is written for the young.

"I've given up writing for the old-you cannot convince them. You must give them time to die, that's all you can do."

Rejection Shared

What would he do if he were 20 today? "I would share with my classmates rejection of the whole world as it is all of it. Is there any point in studying and work? Fornication—at least that is something good. What else is there to do? Fornicate and take drugs against this terrible strain of idiots who govern the world."

What does he feel as a biologist, man must do to adapt. and survive? To answer, he said, one must understand the present. "The great change in human life came at the turn of the century when four discoveries were made which indicated that behind the world we see is hiding another world which we did not see of which man had no idea at all. These were the discovery of the electron, X-rays, quanta and radioactivity, followed shortly by relativity." "Now this new world is dominated by cosmic forces and man holds command over cosmic forces. The force of our arm was exchanged for forces of the atom, which can move mountains or dig harbors in

Man in Command

And with such power at his fingertips, the scientist continued, man can do anything he wants. "You have only to wish it and you can have a world without hunger, disease, cancer and toil—anything you can wish, wish anything and it can be done. Or else we can exterminate ourselves . . . at present we are on the road "American society is death-oriented. If you watch and if you read the newspapers, a great part of it is taken up by war, by killing, by murder, atomic bombs, MIRV's, gases, bacterial agents, napalm, de-foliants, asphyxiating agents and we have war. All our ideas are death-oriented There is no solution to my mind because we are so deep in the groove that we cannot make a turn," he continued. The only way we can survive is to make a new beginning. There is one factor that makes a new beginning very difficult -that the human brain freezes up for new ideas at a certain age, around 40. And our whole government is over this age."

Youth Is Hope

"The only people who can make the turn is youth—our

is not exterminated, they at make the turn. I wish the because they have to come power whatever they do; to cause the old will die and to young will grow up and they Dr. Szent-Gyorgyi said

"So I wish that instead of a pressing themselves with and ficial symbols the whole year of the world would come b gether and hammer out a constitution of the future was which they can then implement not to freeze up before the have thought up what a world should be like. So the is my only hope-youth at I do not expect anything he the present leading class."

Nixon

A Review of World Policy But Few Hard Judgments

By Robert B. Semple Jr.

WASHINGTON, (NYT).-A recent secretary of defense. so the story goes, once asked the State Department to provide him with the government's for-eign policy in the Middle East. After four months of silence he grew mildly impatient, drew up his own policy statement, submitted it to the State Department, and-after another, shorter wait-got back a grudging approval.

In this tale lies at least part, and by no means the smallest part, of the significance of "state-of-the-world" submitted message last week after much preliminary fanfare. The document, an unprecedented undertaking, was intended to pull together for the American people and foreign governments a coherent picture of the thinking behind the isolated policy decisions of the last 12 months and to define America's purposes to the world.

But not the least of its aims was to give the chief of policymakers here, and the undisciplined bureaucracies beneath them, a basic guide to their approach to issues.

How useful a guide it is remains an open question. Diplomacy is an intuitive, ambiguous art, and this report merely confirms the fact. There are few hard policy judgments in it, and the harried bureaucrat seeking guidance in specific. crises would do well to look elsewhere. But for all that, the report is interesting, not only for its sheer novelty, but also because it tells us much about what Mr. Nixon thinks the United States can and cannot do with its power, given the

Themes Dominate

Two themes dominated the message: Mr. Nixon's hope for an improved relationship with the Soviet Union and, more prominently, his application on global scale of the so-called "Nixon doctrine." Despite American involvement in Vietnamindeed, because of it—the President has clearly come to recog-nize that the United States must more carefully calculate its foreign involvements, match its ambitions to its capacities, and reject the presumption that it can go on providing a first-line defense everywhere in the world. "We are not involved in the world because we have commitments; we have commitments because we are involved. Our interests must shape our commitments, rather than the other way around," Mr. Nimm said. Mr. Nixon pursues this general theme in a wide variety of individual pronouncements throughout the message, all of them suggesting a lowered American profile in the world stopping well short, however, of isolationism or outright disengagement. While reaffirming his commitment to the defense of Europe, ha calls upon our allies there, as elsewhere, to undertake a larger and "more responsible participation in their own defense and progress." He hints

'Order in the Court:' The Problem of How to Achieve It

By Lesley Oelsner

NEW YORK, (NYT).—Julius J. Holfman was not the only citations last week. Justice John M. Murtagh has already handed down two contempt sentences, and his trial, of New York's Black Panthers in the State Supreme Court, hasn't even begun.

Justice Murtagh has shown somewhat more restraint than Judge Hoffman, His icy, flat voice, heard over and over in bomb conspiracy case telling court spectators to be quiet. rarely changes pitch. His two contempt citations, one Thursday against a 20-year-old boy, and one two weeks ago against n housewife, were preceded by strict warnings. Still, lawyers here are speculating on the limits of Judge Murtagh's pa-

Restraints Mulled

Just as worrisome to many observers are some of the proposals advanced in the past few weeks by reputable judges anc. lawyers and laymen in an effort to find a way to stop courtroom disruptions, Among those being seriously considered are soundproof plastic bubbles over defendants, keeping defendants in their cells with television sets and trial records to let them know what's going on in court, and five years in jail for a man who shouts out

Certainly no one would deny that the roles of Judge Hoffman and of Judge Murtaghand, potentially, of other judges as more and more radicals are brought to trial-is difficult. It cannot be pleasant, after all, to sit at the judge's bench, the focus of several hundred pairs of eyes and be called a fascist pig. Nor would anyone deny that epithets and fistfights in court can eventually erode the process of justice.

But do these problems warrant putting a defendant under a soundproof enclosure or changing court procedures and rights that are based on centuries of tradition? One's answer depends in part on one's view of the procedures already available to a judge faced with a rowdy courtroom: the contempt power: the authority to physically restrain the defen-dant; the ability to declare a recess and clear the court. Two factors are involved with regard to such proposals: one has to do with their effectiveness and the other with their constitutionality.

Limits of Power

Regarding effectiveness, each of the available remedies has disadvantages. The limits of the contempt power are vague, as the events in Chicago have shown. The gagging and shackling technique, also seen in Chicago, may incite spectators into more disruptions in trials with political overtones, such as the Panther case.

Algeria

A Look at North Africa's 'Piece in Play' After 4 Years of Boumedienne

By Richard Eder

LOIERS OVIT) -At one of the many meetings organized in A recent months to spur Algeria's four-year development planshmed Keid, infinister in charge of party affairs, seemed to be sarried away by the spirit of the occasion.

"Wo are determined to fulfill the development plan," he told he cheering audience, "even if it takes us 10 years." Many people here believe that nothing could better sum up the spirit and prospects of the government of President Houari somedienne four years after he and his fellow colonels ousted shmed Ben Bella, independent Algeria's first president. It is dynamic and full of optimism. It is shaky on organiza-

ton and figures. And it seems likely to accomplish a respectable part of its ambitious program, though not all—and probably not on time.

Algeria, with its struggle for independence longer and harder than that of any other. Arab state, maintains a revolutionary teology as militant as any in the Middle East. But it has also demonstrated a stubborn sense of national interest and an ability on maneuver her interests neatly past some apparently impregnsite ideological fortifications.

"In North Africa we regard Algeria as the piece in play," a French analyst said, referring to the usually wide room for and economic chessboard.

Over the last year the thin, aloof, 37-year-old officer, who mertinew Mr. Ben Bella because he felt the president was acrificing Algeria's interests for the sake of inflated international involvements, has gently deflected his country's course from progoviet neutralism to something more balanced

Col. Boumedienne's Middle East policy, explicitly militant, centers on his belief that only when the Palestine Arabs fight effectively for their cause will the Israelis be forced into an accommodation. In practice this leads to substantial Algerian support and training in the guerrillas, but it also leads away from direct involvement in Brael's confrontation with her neighbors.

Mr. Boumedienne, while publicly supporting the new Libyan regime, has privately castigated its leaders for tying themselves p President Gamal Abdel Nasser of the United Arab Republic.
Perhaps his most constructive achievement in foreign policy the shelving of the old border quarrel with Morocco and the revival d the dormant idea of the Maghreb—the union of Algeria, rankia and Morocco, to be joined some day, perhaps, by Libya, in the east, and Mauritania, to the southwest. Officially, revolutionary Algeria settles for nothing short of rigorous socialism, rigorous Arab nationalism and rigorous rejection of Western imperialism. In practice it has managed to fuse the miterial advantage of eating it.

Less Moscow Influence

"We do not believe that emotion or politics should be allowed miterfere with business" is the way one official explains it.

Two years ago Algeria seemed to be slipping into a state of dependence on the Soviet Union comparable to that of Syria. Today there is virtually unanimous agreement that Moscow's infinence is receding slightly after having peaked.

Soviet assistance—there are approximately 4,000 Soviet technicians in Algeria—remains important and useful, however, that of the heavy equipment of the armed forces has been sent "!!!!(!! by the Russians, but the French have recently made a comeback, applying jet trainers and instruction.

The new Soviet emphasis is economic. In effect, the Russians and the French are competing to subsidize Algeria's vital wine crop, with each buying about half the production, much of which used to go to France.

At the same time Mr. Boumedienne speaks sharply of a need to rid the Mediterranean of "all" foreign military presence, not merely—the theme two or three years ago—that of the Amer-icans. Revolution, an organ of the governing National Libera-tion Front, makes a thinly disguised attack on Communist influence over students who have gone to Moscow or Paris to

As for France and the French, many of the capital's streets have lost their French names—in some cases the old names have simply been painted over-and official policy calls for replacing French culture with Arabic, Syrians have been imported to teach a language in which many educated Algerians are deficient (even some ministers have been heard to break into French when their Arabic faltered during an official speech),

Yet relations with France have seldom been better. About 10,000 French advisers remain, except for several bundred so-called pieds-rouges, who were expelled for Communist activity. French capital is coming in to finance oil and petrochemical development, cement factories and other projects laid out in the develop-

Relations with the United States, formally at least, remain less cordial. Algerian leaders fiercely object to U.S. policy on Israel and Vietnam. Diplomatic ties were broken after the 1967 war, but the small U.S. mission that remains under the flag of the Swiss Embassy finds that its working relations with Algerian officials remain excellent.

Over the past year the U.S. community has grown from 200 families to 300 as Sonatrach, the state oil company, has hired more U.S. technicians and has concluded contracts with U.S. drilling and exploration concerns. The Algerians are arranging to import U.S. computer technology. Early this month the U.S. Export-Import Bank granted a credit so Algeria could buy two

If Algerian leaders refuse to draw ideological conclusions from their search for foreign capital, they have reasons. In many respects Algeria is privileged among the underdeveloped countries The ports, roads, power plants and other facilities left by the French are considerable, and off brings in a steady annual income

Exodus Causes Strain

But the departure of 90 percent of the French population after independence in 1962-63 stripped the country of its edocated elite. To cite a single example, a year after independence there were only two agricultural engineers in a country where the mainstay was agriculture.

The population of Algeria, now more than 13 million, is one of the fastest-growing in the world at about 3.2 percent a year.
With limited productive land available—most of Algeria's 919,000 square miles is desert—the leaders believe that the only way to keep up with growth and attain acceptable standards of education, bealth, housing and income is through industrialization.

The effort involved is enormous. Five billion dollars of investment is called for in the four-year plan. A quarter is to come from foreign credits and investment and the rest from the country's overstrained resources.

Mobilizing the population will not be easy. Following the liberation in recent years—especially after the charismatic Ben Bella was replaced by the diffidant Boumedienne—most Algerians have become decidedly apolitical. The government has tried to make the National Liberation Front a vehicle for moving the masses, but with little success. If the slow progress of the party is one problem-and perhaps more so in the future when austerity, in the form of new taxes and higher prices begins to bite—another is the shortage of trained personnel for the ambitious industrialization program.

Foreign observers are impressed by the government's insistence on including a built-in training program in each foreign invest-ment proposal. That makes the contracts more expensive in the short run, but in the long run it should pay off.

A third problem is simply disorganization, intensified because the government has set up state corporations that are supposed to exercise a monopoly over the main forms of production but lack the experienced personnel to do it properly.

Despite all this, foreign observers are impressed by the vigor with which the young ministers around Mr. Boumedienne are facing up to their problems. Remarkable for a country that grants little political freedom and is embarked on a stage of forced growth is the frankness with which criticism is publicly aired,

A writer denounced the state television news programs: "It is pitiful to see the reporter read from a paper for a whole hour, sometimes correcting as be goes, with no filmed material to illustrate his text. When there are pictures, they deal with the arrival and departure 'festivals' at Dar el-Beida."

Remarkable is that this was printed in the official Army Gazette, which thus joined with the average cab driver in grumbling about the incessant motorcades carrying dignitaries back and forth from Dar el-Beida airport and tying up Algiers traffic every time,

Italy

Political Factions Fiddle As Frustrated Voters Burn

By Claire Sterling

ROME (WP).-- When Italy's 30th postwar cabinet fell two weeks ago, the aging Socialist leader Pietro Nenni warned his democratic col-leagues that doomsday might be coming at last.

"The public has reached the limit of endurance," he said. Out in the provinces, where politicians mingle with their constituents, some might have taken the warning to heart. In Rome, though, negotiations for the next cabinet seem to be eeding on the assumption that the public's endurance is

It is generally conceded here

• The outgoing caretaker cabinet was not obliged to resign when it did, without consulting parliament, let alone being voted down.

• Negotiations among the governing center - left parties (Christian Democrat, Republican, Unitary Socialist, Socialist) may drag on for six or eight weeks despite their having al-ready agreed on most legislative ssues before them—the first time when they formed the original center-left coalition seven years

 Several urgent bills will blocked in parliament while the talks go on (university and tax reforms, investment funds, labor relations, divorce).

• They may end with the formation of yet another care-taker cabinet identical to the

All this is happening while the country is still in shock, after some of the roughest months it has gone through since the war. Between last September and January, between 4 million and 5 million workers were striking on and off in practically every important secthe public services.

9,000 Arrested

More than 9,000 Italians were arrested for taking part in riotous demonstrations during the wage strike, and about 15 million others are liable to arrest, under a criminal code dating back to the Fascist era, for joining in three nationwide general strikes to demand more bouses, schools, pensions, hospitals and price controls. Heavy police and army guards have been on almost perpetual duty around the Senate in Palazzo Madama and the premier's offices in Palazzo Chigi, where the blind, the aged, the youth, the crippled, the veterans of two wars and dozens of other exigent groups have been shouting slogans and blocking traffic almost daily. Outbreaks of violence have grown increasingly ugly—assaults on the police with Molotov cocktails, the burning and sacking of town hallsreflecting not so much defiance of the state as contempt for it. The most shocking case was the bombing that killed 16 persons in a Milan bank last December.

Most observers agree that this great flare of popular temper is nothing like a prelude to revo-hution. There are certainly groups of Italian students and intellectuals who challenge the state's entire political, economic, social and moral structure. This is known here as the "contestazione." But the immense majority of Italians who came out into the streets last autumn would doubtless settle happily for almost any government that has yet to be given a rational explanation for the failure of a long line of center-left governments, each with a com-fortable parliamentary majority, to replace the infamous Rocco penal code drawn up under Mussolini; pass a bill for university reform first introduced in 1965; push through a townplanning bill, agreed upon in 1963, to relieve the indescribable urban congestion caused by the migration of 6 million rural Italians to the cities since the war; establish regions called for in the constitution, designed to bypass Rome's elephantine bureaucracy; modernize a tax structure that still allows two out of three millionaires to pay no taxes; get parliamentary approval for a natural disaster relief fund proposed after an earthquake in Sicily two years ago, pending which not a single bouse has yet been rebuilt for the 90,000 impoverished Sicilians who were left homeless.

Failure Unexplained

The ordinary Italian citizen

The fact that industry and trade have been expanding prodigiously in spite of this is at once a measure of the Italians' vitality and the inadequacy of their governing class. For nearly a decade, this has been a blocked society, unable to translate its extraordinary economic growth into modern and equable

Presumably solutions will be found in time, and it is possible that Italian voters can be induced to hold still that long. They have always been reluctant to shift political allegiances. whatever the provocation, as last six months, however, a judicious politician might wonder how far he can bank on

Seen in this light, negotiations for Italy's 31st cabinet look sadly lackluster. There is no sign that last autumn's npheaval has stimulated the center-left leaders into thinking larger thoughts. None of them is proposing imaginative new legislation, or even new priorities for the bills awaiting passage all this time. Everybody knows that promises renewed are as likely as always to be broken. especially by an assortment of conservative Christian Democratic backbenchers.

Division of Power

It is no less clear that the overriding question before the conferees is a division of power and patronage among eight Christian Democratic factions, a small but pivotal Republican party, and two Socialist parties competing fiercely, since last summer's split, for supremacy in the Socialist potpourri.

This is not to say that the present ministerial crisis is exactly like every other. The difference, and it is appreciable, is that the Communists here are now being appraised more openly and less critically as potential allies than they have ever been since they were thrown out of the government in 1947. Inasmuch as the centerleft parties cannot muster the will power to pass their own bills, so the argument runs, how about accepting belp from a Communist party with one-quarter of the seats in parliament?

So far the proposition stops there. Nobody speaks of actually taking the Communists into the government, and even those who say they want limited collaboration do not always mean it. The Unitary Socialists, who broke away from the Socialist party on the grounds that it was about to become the Communists' Trojan horse, are plainly overstating the danger. Several Socialist leaders sound friendlier to the Communists than they really are, hoping thus to keep their more fractious left wing in line. Much the same is true of the Christian Demo-

At most, the forces "ideologically" convinced of the need to work with the Communists represent well under one-fifth of the central committees of both the Socialists and Christian

Leftist Strategy

One-fifth is quite a lot, certainly enough to be troublesome. Right now, for instance, these left-wing factions are trying hard to scuttle the fourparty negotiations and create a two-party coalition of Socialists and Christian Democrats instead. Since a government like this would have a theoretical parliamentary majority of nine. it could hardly last 24 hours without Communist backing.

No proposition of the sort could get very far here as yet, nor, in general, is the lethal thrust likely to come from that quarter. There is good reason to believe now that the idea of pulling a center-left coalition. together again was written off months ago by several highly influential Christian Democrats, with powerful church

The suspicion was strengthened when, on the eve of nego-tiations last week, the Vatican sent an extraordinarily controversial letter to the Italian Foreign Ministry on the sub-ject of divorce. The question had long since been considered closed. A divorce bill has al-ready been passed in the Chamber of Deputies, without the Christian Democrats' votes but with their explicit agreement, and now awaits passage in the Senate. Nothing could be better calculated to break up the fourparty talks than a move to reopen this question. The move was made.

Elections Sought

Reportedly, the purpose is to force the dissolution of parliament and the holding of new elections. Not only would the divorce bill die automatically in that case, but the issue might well dominate an election campaign, doing wonders for the Christian Democrats. A great many Italians disapprove of Sivorce, not all of whom would necessarily be tempted to vote for the Catholic party other-

The plan has obvious flaws. The most notable is that the Communist party tends to pick up a million new votes in every national election here. Another is that the smaller lay parties standing between the glant Catholic and Communist forces might be further enfeebled. It is a question how much good could come of this for the Christian Democrats-or the Vatican, for that matter-not to speak of the electorate at large.

By Robert H. Estabrook OTTAWA (WP).—Is Canada turning inward? Some people think so, and they date the phenomenon from the replacement of former Prime Minister Lester Pearson in 1968 by Pierre Trudean who is more of a political nation-

The surface evidence is persuasive. After World War II, Canada cut a considerable awath as " middle power, and there was much talk of what it could contribute to world stability by such innovations as peace-keeping forces. Under Trudeau such talk has dimin-

Few cities anywhere are experiencing more wholesale urban face-litting than Ottawa. Even a thoroughly regular visitor notices more excavations for new downtown buildings every time he comes. But such modernization is not accomplished without cost to other values. One victim is the historic Bytown Inn, a colonial-stlyle gray-brick structure that commemorates Ottawa's former existence as a frontier town named after Lt. Col. John By of the British Army Engineers. Col. By was the guiding spirit of the Rideau Canal, built in 1826-1833 as an alternate route from the Ottawa River to Lake Ontario to escape the aggressive Americans. Before the federal capital was named Ottawa, the settlement at the locks built around the falls of the Rideau River was called Bytown.

There is a plaintive silent protest against the march of progress in a sign on the soon-to-be-demolished inn urging photographers to get their pictures now. Having been in Ottawa during a number of snowstorms, the last a 14-inch blizzard that would have thoroughly tied up Washington or New York, I have been interested in how Canadians manage to survive such affairs with so little

The consensus of several friends here is that the main secret is simply to have large amounts of snow removal equipment ready whenever the weather bureau predicts snow. Ottawa, with a metro-politsn population of 500,000, spends 22 million a year on snow removal. It eren plows downtown sidewalks.

But there also are other factors: • The temperature here is generally colder than in U.S. cities, with the result that the snow has less moisture. There is not so much thawing and refreezing that makes for exceptionally slippery streets.

there are far fewer problems with parked cars, which are the curse of snowremoral efforts in apartment areas. • Drivers here have learned that easy does it. The wheel-spinner is looked on as an ignorant oddball. Thus there are fewer avoidable traffic tieups.

Because of rigid law enforcement

Whatever the reasons, Ottawa rarely loses mobility, and main streets remain open even during storms. Incidentally, filling stations that operate jeeps equip-ped with plows will undertake to clear home driveways and walks for, say, $20 Ethiopian-Israeli Tie

Love Story: Sheba

By Murrey Marder

ADDIS ABABA, Ethiopia (WP), A 3,000 - year - old story of seduction has been parlayed here into one of the shrewdest diplomatic operations in Africa, circa 1970.

Although surprisingly few know it, the Old Testament account of King Solomon'e meeting with the Queen of Sheba, told in the first Book of Kings, Chapter 10, by legend bas a fascinating addition to the sequence in the Bible. The tale is a daily living legend in Ethiopia. It is also known in Israel. According to this legend, the 'royal bounty" mentioned in the Bible that the great Hebrew king gave to the visiting queen of the Ethiopians greatly exceeded the material gifts implied by the Biblical account. The "royal boonty" bestowed on the queen, according to the legend, was a son, Menelik I, the first Emperor of Ethiopia.

Lion of Judah

This is the prime reason. rather than the generalized story that Emperor Haile Selassie is the descendant of one of the lost tribes of Israel, that. the Ethiopian ruler bears the title "Conquering Licn of Judah" and why Ethiopia's star is six-pointed, like the Israeli star. instead of the five-pointed star of the Arab lands of Africa and the Middle East. The emperor, eccording to this very vivid old tale among Ethiopians, is, therefore, a di-rect descendant of King Solomon as the result of a night of illicit lovemaking circa 1000 B.C., when Israel's passionate king lured the queen of Sheba into his royal bed. For present-day Israel, the legendary seduction is paying extraordinary dividends. Israeli diplomats here modestly a cribe it as an "emotional affinity." But it is an extremely tangible political diplomatic and strategic affinity, too. Israel, for its size, has a hugely disproportionate hand and influence in

In current pargon, Israeli activity in Ethlopia is "low posture" for diplomatic reasons— Ethiopia is an "unaligned" nation. It calls itself a "Christian kingdom" with an estimated 40 percent of its population counted as adherents of the Ethiopian Orthodox Church, which has long ties with the Coptic Church, and another 49 percent of the population Moslem. The remaining 20 percent is officially listed as

Addis Ababa, thanks to the astute maneuvering of the emperor, is the home of four major

African regional organizations, including the Organization of African Unity and the United Nations Economic Commission for Africa.

Ethiopia, therefore, stands in the center of African organizations in a continent of nations that includes Israel's main antagonist, Egypt, and a mixed array of other Arab nations whose attitude toward Israel varies between militant and moderate hostility.

In such a setting, glaring, extensive, politically significant ties between Ethiopia and Israel-as contrasted to historic affinities obviously would be unwise for this nation's relations with Israel's enemies, especially since many African nations resent the fact that Addis Ababa is the center of so much pan-Africanism.

Even a swiftly-passing-through reporter can immediately feel and hear the special Ethiopian-Israeli relationship. "We have much in common with Israel," said one Ethiopian official at hunch, "Israel is [Egyptian President] Gamal Abdel Nasser's No. 1 enemy; we are No. 2." For example, whether you think well or ill of Addis Ababa's traffic controls, the credit or blame goes to a technician on loan from Israel who is the city's chief traffic engineer. Ditto for the roads of this capital, which are in need of major assistance-the chief road engineer is also an Israeli technician on loan.

Ethiopia's main port of Massawa on the Red Sea also required technical guidance. The man in charge of maintaining the port is another Israeli technical expert. Israeli experts are organizing Ethiopia's first central blood bank; giving advice on housing construction; training Ethiopians in developing, by agreement, the establishment of a pharmacology industry here: aiding the fisheries industry. and conducting the first comprehensive geology and prospecting survey of the nation since the days of Italian rule

Among other activities, in typical Israeli two-for-one efficiency, several doctor-wives of Israeli technical experts here quickly tired of being housewives and began introducing a system of modern child care clinics. The non-civilian-oriented portion of Israel's aid here is said to be even more significant. There are Israeli military experts in important advisory and training positions for Ethiopia's defense forces, although they are predominantly American-equipped, trained and supported. (Ethiopia's Air Force has American F-86 jet fighters, T-33 trainers and F-5 supersonic tactical fighters, along with some British and other planes. The emperor undoubtedly made it clear to U.S. Secretary of State William P. Rogers when he stopped here recently on his African toor that Ethiopia wants more American jets.)

Some responsible Western eources here also suspect, or are convinced, that Israeli advisers literally run Ethiopia's intelligence system. Inquiries about the extent of Israeli military advice and assistance to Ethiopia bring from Israeli diplomats the formal response that any information on such aid if it exists, must come from the Ethiopian government. And that, of course, is most unlikely to happen. As for claims that the Israchis run the intelligence net or that Israel has "thousands" of military advisers in this country, an Israeli diplomat here burst out laughing and said: "Fantastici Can we spare such numbers?"

The number of Israeli experts in Ethiopia, he said, cannot begin to compare with the numbers of technicians on assignments here from the United States, Sweden, West Germany or Britain It is not so much the number of Israeli experts here, but their quality and the jobs they fill. It is also the adroit style of the Israeli operation here and the use made of "the Solomonic legend" that gains the private admiration - or jealousy - of other nations' professionals in rival business. No opportunities are overlooked. Ethiopian tourist advertising (recall that Israeli advice) now uses the slogan "Shebaland" to lure visitors. A few weeks ago, the Israeli airline El Al opened a direct route between Addis Ababa and Jerusalem. Its name? Why, of course, the Queen of Shebs

One can hear privately from both Israelis and non-Moslem Ethiopians a similar saying: "Ethiopia is like Israel, an island surrounded by an Arab

Arab Air Outrages

The death of 47 persons as the result of a bomb explosion aboard a Swiss airliner bound for Israel is the ultimate outrage in the murderous campaign Palestinian terrorists have been conducting against innocent air travelers. The response must come from the world, not from Israel alone.

The boundless nature of the peril as well as its recklessness is made plain by the fact that only a miracle kept 38 other persons from going to their death when another bomb went off in a mail sack aboard an Austrian airliner over Germany. Even though no official determination has been made, there is no reason to question the boast of a fanatical guerrilla organization in Beirut that it was responsible for the fatal explosion.

A competition in murder has apparently developed among these groups of ultramilitants, each trying to outdo all the others in the monstrosity of its excesses. They are an abomination to whatever is legitimate in the cause of the Palestinian refugees, profaning their aspirations to national

The destruction of a planeload of people, among them one of Israel's most distinguished chest specialists, is an unspeakable horror. Now come warnings of more "incidents" and a special concern over the safety of Israeli Foreign Minister Abba Eban who arrived in Munich Sunday for a visit to the memorial to the Jewish dead at Dachau. There is a kinship in bestiality between the indiscriminate killing practiced by the Palestinian extremists and that of Hitler's

The ans wer lies in effective action by responsible Arahs to punish and restrain these fanatics but it is clear that no will to act will develop in the absence of the most severe external sanctions. These must not take the form of punitive bombings directed against Arab civilian centers by the Israelis, great as is the provocation. The appropriate response lies in a worldwide eut-off of air traffle to and from the Arab states by all carriers of all nations until such time as there is assurance that a way has been found to end the Palestinian threat to unoffending planes, passengers and crews. prediction the other day that the 1970's will be "an era where Japan's national power will carry unprecedented weight in world affairs." At the turn of the decade, the industrious Japanese have achieved a gross national product approaching $200 billion, third highest in the world. At present growth rates, Japan confidently expects to reach a $600 billion economy by 1980.

The question is: How will Japan employ the power that goes hand-in-hand with such energy and wealth? There is reason for apprehension and hope in the premier's address to the first session of the Diet.

Japan's neighbors no doubt will be uneasy about Mr. Sato's call for increased military spending at a pace "in accordance with our national power and circumstances." The defense budget is due to rise by 17 percent this year, to $1.6 billion. This is less than 1 percent of gross national product, a ratio that could be considered consistent with President Nixon's call for more self-sufficiency in defense on the part of Asian nations. But members of Mr. Sato's cabinet talk of expanding defense spending to 2 per-

This encouraging pledge is concretely reinforced by the Sato government's decision to boost foreign aid this year from $1.2 billion to $1.4 billion and to channel more aid through multilateral institutions.

If Japan continues to increase foreign assistance in accordance with present plans to reach a level of 1 percent of GNP and to follow the multilateral path, she can make a tremendous contribution to peaceful cooperation and development in the world community. By employing her economic genius in this constructive role, Japan can best fulfill her premier's plea "to build such a nation as will have the whole world ical force. agreeing that the human race is richer for In his latest interview-with a

The question is thus to convince both the leaders and the masses of the sincerity of French policy. With Nixon and his team, the task will be relatively easy. But with the average American, Pompidou will play double or nothing. His interviews with the American press have been clear. The film on himself and his wife that was shown on television acquainted millions of Americans with him. His confrontation with newsmen at the National Press Club in Washington tomorrow will thus be decisive: he will be liked or disliked. If he wins the sympathy of his audience, he wins. Otherwise a very reserved or even hostile reception is to be expected here and there. This is the stake of the visit.

This time the reaction is without visible leaders and organization. It is less a swing than drift-something allowed to happen. Which probably means to arrest and reverse.

The prime targets of the present reaction are the blacks in this country. They constitute an obvious and unpopular minority, geographically centered in the major cities, and without inner economic balance. They were the chief beneficiaries of the liberal surge under Presidents Kennedy and Johnson. And at the heart of that liberal surge was the principle, implicit in the famous 1954 Supreme Court decision against school segregation, that fairness required a progressive

A Field Day

Nobody knows the exact meaning of the many amendments voted up and down last week by the Senate. But that is precisely the point. The ambiguity is large enough to mean a field day for the local officials in the South who have so long and so tenaciously resisted the spirit of the 1954

The real requirement, which fedayeen by Israeli-held Sinal is to move forward to break up residential concentration of the races, is distant beyond imagination. For there has been a turnabout in race politics.

But this momentous changeover had about it nothing of the dramatic. There was no moment of truth, no big speeches or policy "Fighting to create the new statements. letting the segregation issue sink from sight without a big fuss. The administration played that interest to near perfection. Through various spokesmen the White House issued a series of statements on school desegregation that added up to any position anybody wanted to take. Inside the administration, this waffling caused one casualty —the resignation of the Special Assistant to the Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare, Leon Panetta.

The Key Vote

But on the floor of the Senate there was almost complete confusion about the administration's desires. At one point there were two Republican senators—Minority Leader Hugh Scott of Pennsylvania and John Tower of Texas standing on the floor and claiming White House support for opposite views. On the key vote—the vote on the amendment submitted by Senator John Stennis of Mississippi-only eleven diehard Republican liberals stayed with Senator Scott in opposition. Twenty-six Republicans joined Sen. Tower in supporting the Stennis amendment.

On the Democratic side the fuse was not much greater. Sen. Abra-ham Ribicoff of Connecticut had a desegregation policy that was concentrated on the South His stance made it easy for his colleague from Connecticut, Thomas Dodd. and three liberal Democrats

The Big Challenge For the Big Powers

By James Reston

L ondon.—The world is now a collection of staggaring passing through a time of intense intellectual and political revision. Seldom have the continents, the nations, the races, or the generations of men been so dependent on one another in actual fact, or so determined to avoid nuclear war and world economic depression. Yet underneath their cooperation on these two supreme objectives, they have seldom seem-ed more divided and disconnected on secondary but important is-

It is an intriguing paradox. The dominant nuclear powers seem to be acting on the assumption that once they are cautious and cooperative in avoiding a world war and a world depression, they can divide and fight out all other secondary battles as they please. There is discipline and authority on all really dangerous confrontations that might lead to nuclear war and threaten the security of the great powers, but freedom to carry on the power struggle in other nations, at the expense of other peoples.

Dangerous Anarchy

This is obviously better than the old system when the major powers were reckless with one another's vital interests and went to war over the murder of archdukes or the pride of thoughtless political com-mitments, but it is still dangerous anarchy. For the United States and the Soviet Union are now op-posing each other in proxy wars in Southeast Asia and the Middle East which they cannot control, and everybody else seems to be pursuing his own selfish interests.

The movement toward some kind of world order, which was active in the forties and fifties, has now declined. The big powers are protecting themselves, but there is now little control over common international problems, and the ideal of collective security and a league of minds in all nations has loitered down into an attitude of intellectual if not yet political isola-

There is very little talk now in the capitals between Cairo and London of the urgent need to create a world order. The door to the Common Market is finally opening for the British people, but most of them seem unwilling to go through it. The Russians continue to pursue their own historic and selfish interests in the Middle East. Politicians and newspapers talk about "the Arab world," but this is nothing but a phrase for

Eurobonds

Bolstered by New Issues

By Carl Gewirtz

PARIS, Feb. 22.—Nobody has some along to break the 8.75 percent barrier, so 9 percent Euro-bonds are still the vogue. Market sources appear to be mixed about the future, but are agreed that the question is one of quality. A top-credit-rated company could come along, some say, and break the 9 percent cycle with an offering at 8.75 percent. Others, however, feel that a secondary name could push the coupon to 9.25 percent. Meanwhile, two newcomers will keep the scale balanced at 9 percent. The two, announced ast week, are state-owned Gaz ie France, with a $20 million, 15year offering around the middle of next month, and the Republic of Ireland's $15 million, 15-year

N.Y. Stock and Bond Markets Improve Tone In Expectation of a Looser Credit Policy

By Thomas E. Mullaney NEW YORK, Feb. 22 (NYT). -There was surprising buoyancy and enthusiasm in the financial markets last week.

With the approach of March,
Wall Street is building up its expectations that the Federal Reserve System will be moving to a less restrictive monetary policy—the tonic the markets are awaiting. Investors assume that Washington will not allow the current economic slowdown to feed on itself and create a full-sized recession.

They concede that a significant slowdown of the economy is under way and realize that there is always a lag between changes in public policy and their ultimate effect on production, jobs and income. Any change in credit policy now would not be reflected in the state of the economy until six to nine months hence.

the key prerequisites for it have been met. A fairly creditable tight noninflationary federal budget has been fashioned by the administration and confidence is rising that the severe pressure of prices seems to be shating.

The Federal Reserve Bank of St. Louis reported last week that the money supply has increased only at a seasonally adjusted annual rate of less than one-half of 1 percent since early June. Some economists have been recommending that the rate be stepped up to 2 or

In the bond market, prices gained and interest rates mov-ed lower for the third consecutive week.

Economist Walter W. Heller added his voice to those who have expressed the opinion that the Federal Reserve was on the verge of moving toward easier credit. He said he felt the central bank had "overstayed" its program of restricting credit and that it might ease up a bit within the next month.

On Feb. 3. Secretary of the Treasury David M. Kennedy said that lower interest rates may be closer to hand than most people realize." Last week, however, he said the huge backlog of demands for credit makes it unlikely that there will be any "major decline" in interest rates. The testimony of Arthur Burns, chairman of the Fed, before the congressional Joint Economic Committee during the week was sobering enough to keep the credit markets from rushing hurriedly toward lower rate levels. Dr. Burns told Congress that monetary policy could be loosened if the economy follows the course projected by the Nixon administration, but he didn't say when this loosening might begin nor did he indicate that the shift would be dramatic. Despite his low-key testimony, the money and capital markets continued to move toward lower interest rates. Last Tuesday, for instance, invest-ment bankers hid aggressively for $150 million of Michigan Bell Telephone Co. debentures and then offered them to investors at a yield of 8.5 per-cent, well below the general expectations of the market.

It was also somewhat lower than the preceding week's 8.53 percent yield on a Texas utility bond issue that failed to attract

Meanwhile, in the Treasury securities market last Monday, three-month Treasury bills were auctioned at an average discount rate of 6.777 percent, compared with 7.888 percent three weeks earlier.

Most of the major economic statistics for January have now been released and they all confirm the earlier signals that the economy is in the midst of a slump that might turn into

The latest economic yardstick, issued last week, was the report on housing activity. The al-ready severely depressed indicator was down another 6.9 percent last month to an annual rate of 1,166,000 new housing units. A year earlier the annual rate was 1,898,000 units. In January the output of U.S. mines and factories was down for the sixth consecutive month; unemployment rose to a 39 percent rate from 35 in December; personal income gains were cut almost 50 percent from last year's average, and retail sales slipped I percent from the December level. Moreover, December's business inventories rose to 1.59 months' sales, up from the 1.56 ratio in November. Also disheartening was the last month continued to rise in both wholesale and retail areas. On a seasonally adjusted basis, the consumer price index for January was up six-tenths of 1 percent, the same as in December. It was reported that wholesale prices advanced by eight-tenths of 1 percent, promising continued pressure on general prices. Other major financial, business and economic developments of the week included:

• The announcements employee layoffs by General Motors (4,000 workers), Collins Radio (2,700) and Control Data (unspecified).

• The statement by Ling-Temco-Vought, Inc., after dis-cussions with the Justice Department, that it would sell its interest in Braniff Airways and the Okonite Company in order to retain its controlling interest in the Jones & Laughlin Steel Corp.

• The disclosure by General Electric that net income for the strike-affected fourth quarter of 1969 fell to $18.8 million from $122.8 million in the similar period of 1968.

• The move by 40 American steel companies to have the government restrict exports of iron and steel scrap in an effort to reduce the pressures of rising prices.

The decision of the Chicago Board of Trade's directors to approve increases averaging 34 percent in commission rates for grain trading.

• The continuance by Texas of oil production at a 68 per-cent allowable rate for March because of heavy demand. • The rejection by the New York Public Service Commission of a petition by the New York Telephone Co. for a 13.3 percent rate increase and its decision to "consider" granting

FTC Asks Public-Utility-Type Regulation of Auto Industry

"Automobile companies are not in the same category as utilities by any stretch of the imagina-

In an interview with Dow Jones News Service, Mr. Roche said, "There are other alternatives to transportation besides automobiles not like telephone companies and electric power

The 128-page report states that "the present situation is that quality control of auto-mobiles is unsatisfactory, the warranty coverage putatively provided by manufacturers is inadequate, and the industry response to the problem is insufficient to protect the public."

"Because of this, the commis sion believes that the time has come for warranty and quality try to be established by the public, through governmental action, rather than by automobile manufacturers."

5-Year Probe The report comes after five years of investigation by the PTC into consumer complaints that auto manufacturers were not living up to provisions of new-car warranties.

The controversial report could lead to a major fight in Congress. The broad-sweeping pro-

N.Y. Stocks and Bonds Have Buoyant Week

pending final determination of the case.

• The report that the U.S. had a record $7 billion payments deficit on a liquidity basis last year but a surplus of $2.8 billion on an official settlements

• The disclosure that Britain had $93.6 million surplus in her foreign trade in January, compared with $14.4 million in

• The announcement that short interest on the New York Stock Exchange dropped to a three-year low of 13,657,722 shares in mid-February.

The stock market moved generally higher for the week in moderately active trading. Advances numbered 992, while 617 were declining and 147 were unchanged.

Despite the general advance, the number of stocks falling to new lows for 1969-70 far exceeded those that hit new highs-214 to 36. Standard & Poor's 500-stock index rose 1.49 points for the week to 88.03 and the New York Stock Exchange composite gained 0.71 to 49.20. The Dow-Jones industrial index moved up 4.16 to 757.46.

Trading on the Big Board held relatively steady at 55.5 million shares for the week, against 54.2 million the week

Oil Issues

Two oil issues led the mostactive list on the New York Stock Exchange and finished strongly after setting new lows early in the week. Four other oils were among the top ten issues on the active list. Standard Oil (New Jersey) topped the list with trades of 589,700 shares and rose 3 1/8 to company began its big stock financing, the shares traded as low as 49 7/8, their lowest level since 1962.

Atlantic Richfield, the second most-active issue with volume of 476,900 shares, rose 7 1/8 to 66 1/2, after touching a threeyear low at 54 1/8.

Transcontinental Investing, a diversified financial service company with interests franchising, rose I point 17 7/8. A large part of its turnover of 471,000 shares was accounted for by two blocks totaling 174,400 shares, one at the week's low of 14.

American Telephone showed small changes during the week but rallied 1 1/4 on Friday to finish the week with a gain of 1 3/8, at 50 5/8, on trades of 469,800 shares. During the week the company disclosed additional details of its huge debenture and warrant offering in April. Polaroid, a perennial favorite in the glamour group, touched a 1969-70 low of 88 1/8 on Friday, but rebounded to finish at 93 1/8, down 7/8 for the week. Its volume was 462,500 shares. The four other active oil issues were: Texaco, up 2 5/8:

Occidental, off 5/8; Gulf, up 1 1/8, and Phillips, up 8 1/8.

BRIDGE-

By Alan Truscott

The Omar Sharif Bridge Circus, which has been touring North America for the last month has been strengthened by the arrival of Pietro Forquet of Naples, who has re-sumed his celebrated partnership with Benito Garozzo of Rome. Their teammates are Sharif, Léon Yallouze and Claude Delmouly of Paris, and Giorgio Belladonna of Rome.

The diagramed deal, played in the 1963 Bermuda Bowl contest, is perhaps the most crucial of Forquet's long career, for a world title hinged on a finesse. The players were using the Neapolitan System, which in its modern form is called the "Blue Team Club," or the "Blue Club," A two-level response is often made on a short suit, as the first move with a big hand, and this accounts for North's two clubs in response to one heart. South showed a natural diamond suit, and North showed great strength by jumping hearts. A series of cue-bids followed, with a mysterious fivespade bid from North at one point, South eventually bid the grand slam in hearts, but making 13 tricks proved to be another matter.

After the opening club lead, Forquet considered the chances of making 13 tricks by crossruffing. It was clear that he could make all his trumps separately, for a total of nine, but it was equally clear that the chance of cashing four tricks in the black suits was poor, especially in view of the opening club lead. So Forquet had to pin his hopes on finding the spade king on his right. He won the opening lead with the club-ace and drew trumps in three rounds. He cashed the spade ace, entered dummy the spade queen to ruff out East's king. When this worked he could claim his contract, making four club tricks, three spade tricks and a total of six trump tricks.

If the spade finesse had lost, the United States would have won the match by 6 international match points instead of losing by 19.

HIGH ON FOGGY BOTTOM: AN OUTSIDE INSIDE VIEW OF THE GOVERNMENT

By Charles Frankel. Harper & Row. 240 pp. sg Reviewed by Bernard D. Nossiter

MANY officials from the Johnson administration are now telling us that they really opposed the adventure in Vistnam all the time. But Charles Frankel, a philosophy professor who led one of the marginal outposts at the State Department, is unique. He resigned over the war. A thoughtful, engagingly modest man, Frankel claims neither superior moral rectitude nor special political prescience. He came from Columbia University to the government in 1965, troubled about the Dominican Republic and Vietnam, but willing to regard both as aberrations. He left two years later, convinced that Washington's energies were so absorbed by the war that he could make no useful contribu-

The single most important consequence of his brief career as assistant secretary of state for educational and cultural affairs is probably this good-natured account of his frustrations in office. His book is unmarred by rancor, strong in gentle irony and rich in shrewd observations about an overpowering bureaucracy and the poi-soned fruit "of policies that overorganize it and overextend it for the business of war." Early on, Frankel learned that fresh ideas are an unwelcome intrusion at the State Department, where careers are made by an almost Buddhist reverence for the word of past sages. Frankel had been selected for his job largely because of a well-regarded report be had written that proposed a program to redesign and strengthen the cultural bureau. But the cake of custom at State, like other well-entrenched agencies, doesn't easily admit new ingredients.

"I had come into office with projects and plans," he writes.
"And I was caught in an irresistible movement of paper, meetings, ceremonies, crises and trivialities. There were uncleared paragraphs and cleared ones, and people waiting for me to tell them what my plans were, and people doing things that had nothing to do with my plans. I had moved into the middle of a flow of business that I hadn't started and wouldn't be able to stop. There were people in place to handle this flow, and established machinery in operation to help me deal with it . . . In a word, I had power. And power had me." A central difficulty, he discovered, is government's imperviousness to voices and informstion outside the established channels. Thus officials hear only what they want to hear, see only what they want to se and practice an unconscious but pervasive self-deception. He recalls the commander of the destroyer Maddox, who second thought was not at all certain that he had been attacked in the Tonkin Gulf, but suspected his sonar had picked up the sound of his own or SCIEWS.

"I wonder," writes my "how much of what gov hears is really the sound OWN SCIEWS, reflecting own rudder and comb through its own highly se soner." From time to Frankel sought out White aides and department to express his doubts attention to the growing from the intellectual as demic community, with whose support, he suga government can sovem He was listened to police the prevailing view retheir government at a di time weren't responsible witling knowingly jeopardizes $200,000 a year in earning power for a two-bit operation that is both illegal and unprofitable. If that's all he did, then the only victims of his foolishness are himself, his family and his team, not the game. Baseball has survived exposure to innumerable books before this one came along, including some in high places.

Far more damaging to the game, it says here, is the intemperate language used in some papers reporting McLain's sus-- "Baseball's Darkest Hour." "Hall of Shame," and such blether. Sports Illustrated didn't brighten the picture by suggesting that suspicious circumstances surrounded the death of a bettor who had hit the McLain book for $46,000.

Benefit of the Doubt

As McLain himself conceded Bowie Kuhn had no option but to suspend him after the pitcher admitted to the baseball commissioner that he had owned a piece of a handbook in Flint Mich., in 1967. Kuhn properly made it a suspension of indefinite length, pending completion of "a review of his situation."

McLain thinks the suspension will be lifted as soon as the commissioner is convinced that the pitcher has told him the whole truth. He may be over-optimistic in this regard, but he is asking nothing he isn't entitled to when he says: "Un-til then, I ask for the benefit of the doubt."

Kuhn has done nothing to encourage giving McLain the benefit of the doubt. The commissioner's deliberate vagueness about the reasons for the suspension and his refusal to elaborate or answer questions are an invitation to the public to think the worst. Indeed, some will review the commissioner's statements in the case and be encouraged to think the worst.

On Feb. 13. Kuhn admitted he was inquiring into "certain off-the-field activities" of Mc-Lein and said there was "no indication that these activities in any way involve the playing or outcome of baseball games." Six days later—the Sports Illustrated piece about McLain's connection with the Flint bookle came out in the meantime-Kuhn announced the suspen-sion without e bill of partieulars and without repeating the assurance about the "outcome of games." So, the suspicious are bound to think, maybe there was hanky-panky on the dia-

Portrait of a Kook What are the facts? Inasmuch as the commissioner can't or won't tell us, let's review what we know. Dennis Dalo McLain is a kook. There's oever been any secret about that. He is a pop-off guy who has got himself into hassles with the Detroit fans, his employers, the American League brass, his teammates, and selected segments of the press.

Whatever shady characters he may know, it is pretty clear that he wasn't dumping ball games in 1968 or 1969. In those two seasons he won 55 games and lost 15. These performances got his baseball wage op to $90,000, and he has said that his outside activities—playing the organ and a variety of business connections brought his income to $200,000.

Nevertheless, he has been in financial difficulties. The day after his suspension, a court issued an eviction order putting him and his family out of their home in the Detroit suburb of Beverly Hills unless he pays up his arrears in rent within 20 days.

Time's A-Wasting

What we get out of this is a sketch of an irresponsible whack. It now appears that in 1967. when he was 23 years old, he invested in the Flint handbook. That's illegal for anybody, and absolutely verboten for a ball player.

The word is that the book didn't handle any action on baseball. The word also is thet McLain was simply a mark. If the book made a score, he wasn't told about it. If a bettor hit. Denny was invited to pay

Up to now, the evideoce is that McLain is a rattlebrain who has been played for a sucker and got loused up in the process. If thet's all there is to it, common decency demands Kuhn make this clear. If there is more to it, Kuhn owes it to baseball to say so. And soon,

"Wonderful though the brotherhood of man is, Senator, we fully realize that it cannot be brought about in your time. Or in our time. Or, for that matter, in the time of anybody who might come day become a white voter in the state of Mississippi. That is private, of course. Any other questions?" "My name is Nick and I've got a question." "What do you do. Nick, that gives you ao interest in this absorbing political pastime?" "I'm a bus driver, and what want to know is whether the busing of schoolebildren is going to be ended, thus putting me out of work.

"You have to realize, Nick, that the parents of this country will never allow their children to be bused great distances to school to create immigration. However, we can say with equal certainty that the parents of this country will go right on sllowing children to be bused great distances to school to maintain segregation. Your job is safe. Yes, sir!"

"Senator Ribicoff of Connecticut. I feel terribly guilty about being from the North because—and it takes great courage to say this—it still has a great deal of school segrega-

"Yes, we know about segregation in the North. Senator. What is your question?

"I have no question. I just wanted to take this opportunity to tell the world how guilty I

"Anyone else?" "I'm Attorney General Mit-chell and I'd like to repeat the President's question. What is our policy on school desegrega-

"Well, you have to realize that we wouldn't have to have a policy if it hadn't been for the Supreme Court. So naturally, we are doing our best to eliminate that particular body. With all deliberate speed, I ought to add for the benefit of any folks here with Northernliberal-black-legalistic leanings, judiciary-wise. Anyone else have a questico?"

"Yes. sir. I'd like to know... "Just a minute, kid, Don't you know that children are supposed to be seen and not heard?

THE CHASE-Some of Bill Allen's hounds on the chase. They have never missed their quarry.

By Alfred Friendly STRATFORD-ON-AVON, England (WP1.-You get an hour or so headstart and pelt as hard as hardened arteries permit through field and farm, over fences, along paved roads and into woods. Then time runs out and very soon you hear them—the deep, throbbing, greedy howls of 21 baying blood-

You are Eliza crossing the ice, your notebook cradled in your arms (except that her feet could not possibly have been as wet and cold as yours; you are escaping Dr. Moreau who is going to turn you into an animal (or have you got two H. G. Wells short stories mixed up?); you are an escaping war ace, with Heinz von Schnurbartbinder, the "Beast of Stalagiuft 7," on your trail.

No, you are not any of these; you are an old fool making a spectacle of yourself in Britain's worst blizzard of the winter. The hounds get you, of course.

and in short order. If you stand and face them instead of continuing the escape attempt, they overwhelm you in tongue-licking, tail-wagging friendliness for a few moments, and theo turn away. They are oot interested in capturing you, but just in the sport of trailing. In Hunting Costume

Behind the hounds comes their owner, Bill Allen, a huge and outrageously handsome man, curly gray hair surmounting blue eyes and aquiline features, impeccably uniformed in hunting costume and looking dashing astride his big hunter.

The dogs oever fail, Mr. Allen

An Hour's Headstart, But There's No Escape

of thing-1,000 hunts in the last three years alone—they have never let a quarry escape. They have run 25 miles in one morning and 15 more in the same afternoon after two "fugitives," sensibly on horse, over a course requiring the mounted hunters to take 100 jumps to keep up with them.

"You hunt with this pack with the key to the gate in your pocket," Mr. Allen explains. "If you have to stop to open gates, or ride around hurdles, they leave you out of sight." Mr. Allen keeps his pack, the only one of its kind in Britain, at his baronial horse-breeding farm at Wooton Wawen, about six miles from Stratford-on-Avon, in what is left of the Forest of Arden. They are descended from St. Hnbert hounds-that worthy being the patron saint of hunters—brought to England by William the Conqueror. When they are after you, you realize what a bastard William really was.

Called bloodhounds-not because of any taste for hemoglobin, but because they are of pure blood, i. e. thorooghbred they are leaner, of longer muzzle and less lugubrious mien than the American variety, although oot so slimmed down as the American 'coon hound, But all of them, and bassets and foxhounds as well, are bred to form from the same original

Mr. Allen says that his pack will trail anything, human or animal, but he uses them only with the former. The quarry are usually local farm boys, afoot or a-horse, vainly determined someday to outwit the pursuers, or lads from the local high school cross-country teams, ont for purposeful exercise. The hunts are always done with "2" clean boot"-that is, artificial scent is oever used.

Mr. Allen confesses himself haffled by the dogs' uncanny tracking ability. It is assumed, of course, that they trail by the scent of the quarry, but saying that still leaves a great deal to be explained.

It is clearly not direct ground scent alone, else how could they follow a mounted quarry as easily as one oo foot? A roaring wind, water crossings, hoar frost—all obstacles in hunting folklore to the foxhoundspresent no obstacles at all to the bloodhounds. Mr. Allen has one bitch who, on flushing a pheasant, will point in the air, following its high half-circling flight. The hound's eyesight, like that of almost all dogs, is extremely poor, so it can't be the sight of the bird that is followed, nor the ground

Some more remarkable experiments:

 A skeptical BBC man had Mr. Allen deposit a brand oew, unworn pair of rubber boots from a Laod Rover in the middle of a field. The "quarry" ran a mile or so in his own shoes to the boots, changed into them, tied his own shoes around his neck, ran another mile, changed back, leaving behind the boots, reeking with the smell of oew rubber. He then ran another mile. hounds never missed a stride.

One "fugitive" ran to the edge of a large lake, jumped into a skiff, rowed to the middle, took a right-angle turn and rowed ashore again, thence continuing his run. The hounds, far behind, came to the shore, plunged in, followed the original course of the boat and made the 90-degree turn at almost the spot the rower had, and pursued the chase to victory.

• The hounds have successfully followed a trail laid down by a runner 24 hours before. Mr. Allen wants some scientific investigators from universities or research organizations to help solve his questions. He has records, in ground and air temperature, humidity and wind velocity, of 1,000 honts to lay before them.

He is not given to spinning wild theories, but points out that 30 years ago it was taken for granted that it was phenomenal night vision that enabled bats to fly in otter darkness without touching a network of threads strung in their path. Now it is known that they do it by a facility akin to
